Agenda

This workshop will explore potential California growth projections for alternative fuels up to 2020 and from 2020 to 2050. Staff will facilitate presentations on transportation industry subsectors from stakeholders, government agencies and other organizations.

Participants will be asked to present transportation fuel, vehicle and infrastructure growth estimates and the assumptions, circumstances and conditions required to substantiate projections. Participants will also be asked to provide information supporting trends in vehicle and fuel efficiency and the impact of expected land use changes to reduce vehicle miles traveled. This workshop will elicit information for use in developing the transportation section of the IEPR.

Background

As part of the Integrated Energy Policy Report, the Energy Commission evaluates alternative transportation energy scenarios to examine potential effects of alternative fuel use, vehicle efficiency improvements and shifts in transportation modes on public health and safety, the economy, resources, the environment, and energy security. The IEPR transportation analysis also includes assessments of the successful introduction of alternative fuels in the context of fuel prices, the availability of advanced transportation technologies, and the future contribution of zero-emission vehicles and clean-burning fuels to achieve climate change and other air quality goals, energy security and other public benefits. The Energy Commission uses these assessments to provide an analytic foundation to develop energy policy recommendations about the most current and pressing energy issues facing the state, and across different markets and systems.

The transportation analysis supports several related energy policy and program activities, including the Alternative and Renewable Fuel and Vehicle Technology Program (Assembly Bill 118, Nuñez, Chapter 750, Statutes of 2007), investment allocation analyses, petroleum use reduction assessments, and transportation fuel infrastructure requirements and assessments.
